Photo 8. Areas such as this are ungrazed by livestock because they are too far from water or are blocked off by untraversable terrain. Deer and other big game reach such areas easily. KOFA game range below Kehling Tank.

Photo 9. There is a substantial acreage of malpais site on the allotment. Such sites produce scant forage, mainly annuals.
Photo 10. On sites such as this the soil has not developed sufficiently to support perennial grasses. Forage plants consist mainly of annuals such as Indian wheat, filaree and Pectocarya. Foothills Granite Wash Mountains.
